Sam,

Our goal is to structure this as a rewards offering based on the project. The amount of tokens the customer purchases will simply outline the amount of volume reward the customer gains.

Based on this, the percentage and reward system would not classify a security.

Also, since a utility token holder has not voting power or corporate authority, this even more so eliminate security like elements.

Kindly,

Eric Pope

So just to confirm Eric we are able to offer this to card holders:

0.8% of the revenue share from Visa and MasterCard given to token holders divided by the percentage of CTR tokens owned (CTR TOKENS are a fixed amount 100M) and this program is only for eligible card + token holders. This is not classified as a security correct ?

Sam,

Please see the attached additions;

Major focus was on AML/Token Sale Terms.

Next:

Press Release
Website Review of Claims

Any questions please advise. Keep in mind your token sale terms must be a living and 'breathing document' - more edits are inevitable - as the SEC builds, we will have to change the terms too reflect any coming lingo. Our goal is to present this token and the rewards program in a light that makes it not a security - to the effect the law continues to allow.

Kindly,
